DETAILED ACTION

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 103

The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

Claims 31, 32, 34, 35, 36 and 37 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Japanese patent document 2001-303395 in view of Skeleton et al (US 4,340,091)

Japanese patent document 2001-303395 teaches the invention including a woven or knit fabric formed of an elastic yarn. Japanese patent document 2001-303395 further teaches a stress at 10% elongation of 100-600N/5cm which is inclusive of the claimed 150-600N/5cm. The rate of elastic recovery is set forth as 75% rather than 90% as claimed. Also Japanese patent document 2001-303395 does not expressly set forth a breaking elongation of greater than 60% or the specific hysteresis loss of between about 20 and 45%. It would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to choose from a number of different elastic recovery including at least 90% in order to optimize the recovery fabric for a specific end use. Clearly one of ordinary skill in the art would realize that greater recovery of the elastic material would help maintain the desired shape of the fabric. The elastic yarns of Japanese patent document 2001-303395 are polyester-ether based elastomers just as those of applicant's disclosed invention. As such as a matter of inherency the specific material properties as claimed would be virtually the same. Skeleton et al (US 4,340,091) teaches that hysteresis is an important consideration when viewing the fatigue lifetime of elastomeric material. As such to the extent that it may not be considered inherit it would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to provide the specific hysteresis loss as claimed in order to optimize the elastic characteristics, e.g. lifetime fatigue of the fabric, for a specific end use in order to maintain durability of the fabric. Concerning the density and covering rate of the fabric, it would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to choose the specific density and covering rate of the fabric since it has been held that where the general conditions of a claim are disclosed in the prior art, discovering the optimum or workable ranges involves only routine skill in the art. In re Aller, 105 USPQ 233.

Allowable Subject Matter

Claims 33 and 38-59 are objected to as being dependent upon a rejected base claim, but would be allowable if rewritten in independent form including all of the limitations of the base claim and any intervening claims.

Conclusion

The prior art made of record and not relied upon is considered pertinent to applicant's disclosure.
